

Arlene

Arlene loves everything to do with the environment. She has an undergraduate degree in environmental engineering and is currently studying a master's degree in sustainability in Mexico, her homeland. In past years, she worked with groups of children to teach environmental stewardship, focusing on topics such as climate change, contamination of the oceans, and marine species in danger of extinction.

Given her passion for the outdoors, it's not surprising that her favorite free-time activities include swimming in lakes and climbing volcanoes such as El Acatenango near Antigua, Guatemala.